

Permit revisions can now be managed online

The City of Edmonton has expanded its online permit services to support permit revision requests for commercial and new house construction projects. If a proposed development changes following issuance of a permit, the permit must be revised. Common types of revisions include truss/joist layouts changes, elevation and layout changes, or changes in engineering.

To submit a permit revision request after a permit has been issued, open the permit project from the self service dashboard and use the Request Revision button next to the permit listed in the project. You will be able to describe the changes and submit revised plans and documents.

The revision details will then be reviewed by a Safety Codes Officer and/or a Development Officer and you'll be able to see the status of the revision review online.

Please note: permit revisions (after the permit has been issued) can be requested online for any Commercial Permit project applied for after July 2019 and any House Permit project applied for after February 2020. If you don't see the Request Revision button next to your permit in the dashboard, you'll need to request the revision by email to the file contact.
